A person can have many different types of friends. You can have really good friends who are honest, caring and great at giving advice. Then there are friends that are classmates or colleagues who you only really see in school or at work. You also have the people you see at the gym or in the local coffee shop: acquaintances. Do we really need all of these people in our lives?

23. Where do you usually see classmates or colleagues?

- A. At the beach
- B. At the cinema
- C. At the airport
- D. At school or work

24. What is an acquaintance?

- A. A very close friend
- B. Someone you only know a little
- C. A family member
- D. A teacher

Another study found that managers who were more introverted were actually highly effective when managing more vivacious employees because they were more likely to listen to what their employees were telling them. So, loners can be good team players, just not in the way you might have been expecting.

25. Why were introverted managers effective with vivacious employees?

- A. They controlled them strictly.
- B. They encouraged competition.
- C. They listened carefully to their employees.
- D. They spoke more than their employees.

Socialising can boost our mood and reduce stress. In fact, research suggests that the endorphins released during positive interactions can imitate a physical response similar to exercising. No, not the sweating profusely part, the relaxed and less anxious part. Socialising is also said to improve a person's quality of life and well-being due to the happiness and contentment that you feel when you're with your friends. So, there you have it, having friends is the best thing in the world, or is it?

26. The physical response mentioned in the text is similar to:

- A. sleeping
- B. eating
- C. exercising
- D. studying

27. Which of the following is implied about endorphins?

- A. They are released only during exercise.
- B. They contribute to feelings of relaxation and reduced anxiety.
- C. They cause stress.
- D. They are unrelated to emotions.
