What is the main point in the text, according to the writer?

- The WWF should change its symbol to attract more funding.
- Beautiful animals are more important than unknown or ugly animals.
- All animals with their different physical features receive equal attention and support.
- Popular animals attract funding, leaving others at greater risk.

When I lost my job in the shipbuilding industry it was hard to find new employment, and this was the only job I could get. But it was a good decision. I like my work. Well, we give people parking tickets of course, but that's not all we do. We also help the police when they are looking for stolen cars. In fact, we collect a lot of local information for the police - it's an important part of our job. Popular ones are: 'I couldn't remember where the car was', 'I needed the toilet urgently', 'I stopped to help an old lady'. Someone even said he paid for a ticket, put it in the car, but his parrot ate it! Sometimes, we have radios so we can get help when we're in trouble. And now some wardens actually have video cameras as part of their uniforms. So, if anyone gets aggressive, it's on camera. Strangely, some of the most aggressive people are parents when they're collecting their children from school! You certainly keep fit because you're on your feet all day. I like that. And not everyone hates us. Some people think we do a good job. They know that without us the traffic would be terrible, and the emergency services couldn't do their jobs. No, millions of people just don't pay. And others write to the parking department and complain. The department accepts about 60% of these excuses, so those people don't have to pay. But the government still gets over £1 billion a year from parking fines.

Who are described as surprisingly aggressive?

- Taxi drivers looking for people to pick.
- Teenagers returning from gyms.
- Parents collecting children from school.
- Tourists taking a round exploring the area.

It's no accident that the symbol of the World Wide Fund for Nature is a giant panda. These animals are cute or beautiful, or both, and of course we all want to save them. This popularity enables organisations such as the WWF to raise money to support a range of critically endangered species. However, less well-known or 'exciting' creatures are far more likely to become extinct because they don't get enough attention from researchers. Invertebrates (animals without a backbone) make up over 90% of all the creatures on Earth, but get only a tiny percentage of the money available to protect our wildlife. And what about those creatures that many people would find positively ugly? With its tiny eyes, big mouth and slimy pink body, the blobfish is far from attractive. This marine creature lives deep in the ocean, where the pressure is very high. As a result, it has tiny fins and no skeleton, which keeps it from being crushed by the water pressure. Unfortunately, when fishing boats sweep the ocean floor, looking for other fish and crustaceans, these fish can get swept into the nets accidentally.

Which sentence is true about the role of funding for wildlife?

- Funding is equally distributed among all species on Earth.
- Invertebrates receive the highest amount of funding.
- Beautiful animals cannot survive without funding.
- Most of funding goes to popular animals like the giant panda.
